There are many of years of migration and war in between ancient Egypt and today. I see no reason to go around doubting people instead of welcoming them into your shared family. We all migrated out of Sub-S Africa anyway, and these are just lines we drew on maps. Live and let live

Maybe, but you can't deny that there was a very large population of Africans in Egypt, so there's no reason to doubt their claims other than not wanting to see the African influence in what made Egypt so amazing. I think it only makes Egypt cooler.

I don't know, I don't think it's a problem. When you get where someone is coming from (being repeatedly denied access to their heritage) then it's easy to not get in your feelings about it. Old imperialism still shapes geopolitics today, and we need to reckon with that for real.

Modern Egyptians are certainly at least partially the product of colonialism and invasion. As with Sicilians like myself-- the whole of North Africa. No shame in knowing about where we came from. We can still be proud of how we rep our heritage today in a more inclusive way.

It's impossible to determine in via DNA. I don't know why I wouldn't take someone at the word. It's a sad way to live thinking you have to hold everyone to some kind of scientific standard of who they say they are. Let people live.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 31 Jul 2018

"Admixture" is a very deceptive term. It requires you to establish the boundaries of "pure" groups first, to be able to say that those groups then mix. There aren't racial groupings in the first place. At least not in terms of DNA. Politically, we've created them.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 31 Jul 2018

Whether or not they were human isn't really a relevant question, and who they are more/less similar to has no bearing on whether or not there were also African Egyptians. Keep in mind you are looking at a very small sample size of DNA compared to the ancient Egyptian population.

Edward Jenner did not patent his technology. He freely shared it because he understood how important it was to the world (remember, these were the days of smallpox and black plague). He didn't make changes to it, and he also didn't ask for credit. That's just the modern narrative

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 31 Jul 2018

Replying to @notcolloquial @LibAngry and 43 others

1) The middle east and africa are both underepresented in DNA sampling, and 2) Sub-saharan Africa contains 95% of ALL human variation, so DNA banks that sample 2 or 3 populations and pretend those represent the region are oversimplifying in a very misleading way

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 31 Jul 2018

Replying to @EgyptIsForever @LibAngry and 43 others

Using DNA like that is flawed for a simple reason-- it compares an archeological exhumation against a database created from people who are alive today. DNA databases don't show where you came from, they show where people like you live today, and are highly skewed bc: 1/2

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 31 Jul 2018

No, not Jenner himself. What he did was inoculation, not vaccination. Vaccines happened way later, thanks to the contributions of scientists from many races and nations.

Fun fact: Edward Jenner, considered the "inventor of vaccines," learned about inoculation from his slaves. The practice had been common in Africa for hundreds of years. Additionally, most modern antibiotics, including penicillin, are derived from the medicinal plants mentioned.

"You realized what could have happened to you if we didn't have connections? Some cop goes by the book and they charge you with attempted murder! You hear me! Attempted murder, then what? THEN WHAT?"

TALKING TO COPS IS NEVER SAFE
CONTACTED BY THE POLICE?
Stop! Don't talk alone! Even 'nice' cops are ALWAYS gathering information to land on a charge, including on people you care about. You are not required to speak with any law enforcement officer or agent.
COPS ARE ALLOWED TO LIE
It is legal for cops to lie about what the subject of their investigation is. Agencies at all levels frequently share information with each other and there are very few "rules" as to how cops can ask for that information.
CALL A LAWYER INSTEAD
You have a right to consult an attorney before talking to law enforcement or deciding whether or not to talk to them. You have a right to have an attorney present while being questioned by law enforcement even if you volunteer to do an interview.
NEED HELP?
Your local National Lawyers Guild Chapter can provide assistance in finding political attorneys in your area. Reach out ahead of any attempts at repression and make a safety plan with trusted ones. Learn about histories of grand juries and political movements.

Allow me-- the origins of race as a taxonomy had more to do with justifying inexpensive labor, and the resuling spiral of dehumanization over hundreds of years is why race feels natural. Jefferson called on scientists to "prove" race-some keep at it. Let it die already.

And the idea of ignoring the obviously social and economic origins of race for something you have to try this hard to justify so you have an excuse to keep basing your politics on racial hierarchy... sheesh just say you simply have feelings and own your disgust and work on it...

The ones that show that use skewed samples of populations and/or genes. Like yes, you have a pigment mutation... you could literally find those genes and prove your difference in that way, but you'd still be more similar to the part of Africa you came from than other whites.

In what world is it not cherrypicking? Seriously what objective method is not randomly sampling genes? That's laughable, and yet plenty of people have already done it..... and STILL can't reject the null hypothesis!

No, because 1) that just tested people alive today based on where they live, since there's no other way to determine their race, and 2) it's not a random sample of genes, you are just engineering a conclusion.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 6 Jul 2018

Replying to @EuropeanDefense @The_LS_Project

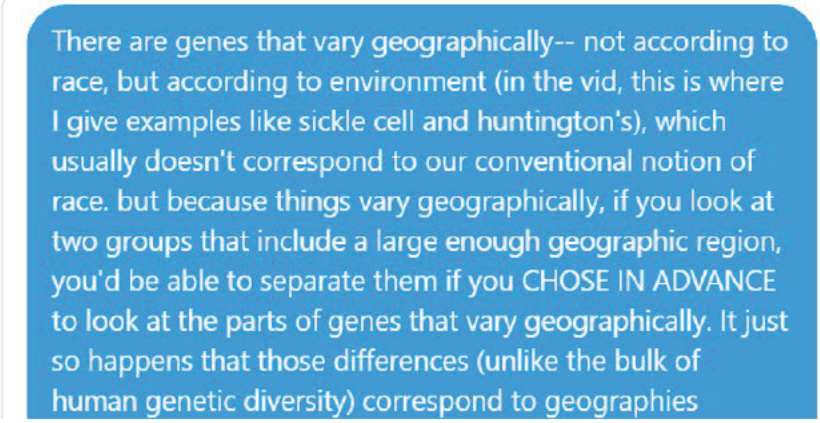
Watch the video again. Here's a short part about why this idea is stupid. It requires you to write off the majority of genetic diversity and then point to only the part that confirms your ontological theory and say "SEE! IT'S SCIENCE!"

Shreiking ideas loudest =/= being right



There are genes that vary geographically-- not according to race, but according to environment (in the vid, this is where I give examples like sickle cell and huntington's), which usually doesn't correspond to our conventional notion of race. but because things vary geographically, if you look at two groups that include a large enough geographic region, you'd be able to separate them if you CHOSE IN ADVANCE to look at the parts of genes that vary geographically. It just so happens that those differences (unlike the bulk of human genetic diversity) correspond to geographies

One of the tricks of white supremacy's 'biological logics' of race. We KNOW white isn't a genetic code or a biological way of being. It's a position someone holds (an ontology?), which can paradoxically (even if temporarily) extend to those we don't think of as biologlly 'white.'

Right. Which is what makes libertarianism an impossible idea. Or, as Adolph Reed Jr said:

> Libertarianism is a shuck, more an aesthetics than a politics. Libertarians don't want the state to do anything other than what they want the state to do. And, as its founding icons understood, it is fundamentally about property rights über alles. Mises and Hayek made clear in theory, and Thatcher and Friedman as Pinochet's muse in Chile did in practice, that a libertarian society requires an anti-popular, authoritarian government to make sure that property rights are kept sacrosanct. That's why it's so common that a few bad days, some sweet nothings, and a couple of snazzy epaulets will turn a libertarian into an open fascist.

I don't think individual liberty is the ONLY value we should care about; there are definitely times imo the public good overwhelms individual liberty (murder laws). But criminal penalty for sales that would be legal EXCEPT they didn't get the state's permission? Corruption.

You're not the only ones capable of using force. You're not the only ones who can act without regret.

The "first they came for, then they came for, and soon it could be you" logic is great, but it needs to be contextualized as a fatal flaw in the epistemology of western enlightenment thinking if it is ever going to be undone.

With a popular software program known as Structure, a researcher indicates how many genomic clusters the data should be grouped into. The program then allocates the individuals whose DNA was sampled into the predetermined number of clusters based on their genetic similarity. For any given number fed into the program, explains anthropologist Deborah A. Bolnick, "Structure searches for the most probable way to divide the sampled individuals into that pre-defined number of clusters based on their genotype." It uses a mathematically sophisticated algorithm to maximize the chances that the genotypes of individuals in the cluster will match."

Researchers began attempting to group human populations based on their genes soon after the human genome was sequenced. A particularly high-profile project was led by Noah Rosenberg, a former high school math whiz who became a computational biologist at the University of Southern California. His team included genetic scientists from Stanford, Yale, and the University of Chicago, as well as institutes in Paris and Moscow. Unlike in previous studies, Rosenberg's team used computer software to detect clusters of genetic similarity in unidentified DNA sampled from people across the globe. Could the researchers scramble the groups' genetic signatures and BERLIN, Germany: Trumpian U.S. Ambassador to Germany Richard Grenell has expressed great excitement over the wave of conservatism in Europe, saying he wants to "empower" leaders of the movement.

At a sit-down interview at his official residence in Berlin with Breitbart London, Ambassador Grenell said: "There are a lot of conservatives throughout Europe who have contacted me to say they are feeling there is a resurgence going on."

"I absolutely want to empower other conservatives throughout Europe, other leaders. I think there is a groundswell of conservative policies that are taking hold because of the failed policies of the left," he added.

Your daily reminder that race is a political, not biological, phenomenon, courtesy of this lovely letter from @AmericanAnthro.

Other disciplines, take note. Don't let people misuse and misrepresent your data for evil. anthrosource.onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/epdf/10.11…

> Today, however, we've reached an impasse in the American discourse on race. While scholars and practitioners—ourselves included—have created the framework and the rhetoric to be globally inclusive, regardless of difference, we have also failed to be clear about our political intent. Diversity and Inclusion is about taking personal responsibility for our violent historical past. Particularly, in the face of the rise of the Alt-Right, we need to draw a line in the sand: heteronormative whiteness is based on its supremacy and de-humanization of others, and is unacceptable. And, while identity politics is a means to achieve equity and dignity, is not an end-goal in-and-of-itself. Rather, we must continue to deconstruct and destroy the very real, but very socially constructed categories of race, and in the process denounce whiteness as illegitimate.

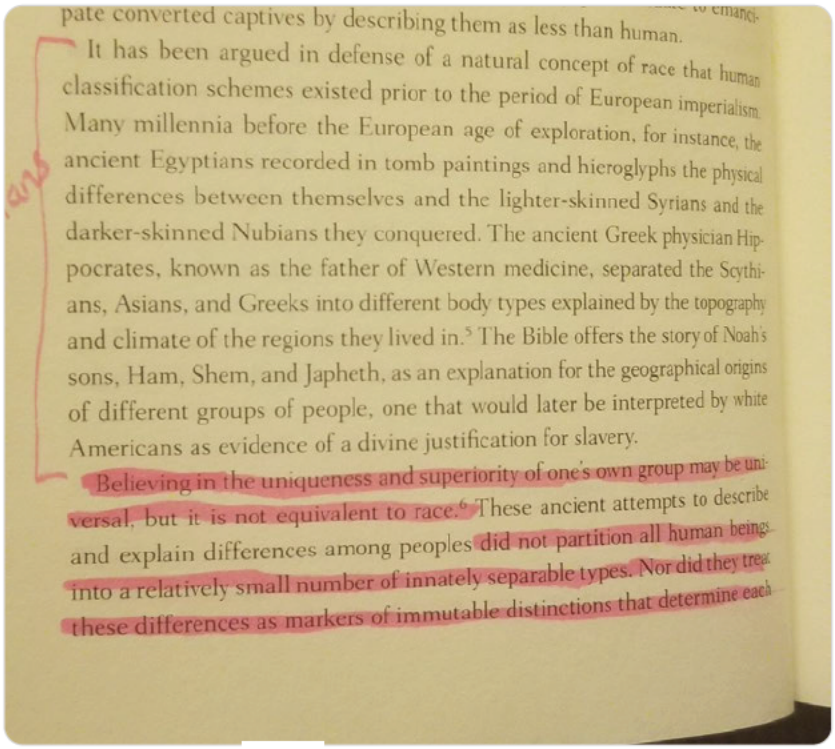
This is a common misconception, thank you for bringing it up! Have you read any of Dorothy Roberts work? See passage below:



pate converted captives by describing them as less than human.

It has been argued in defense of a natural concept of race that human classification schemes existed prior to the period of European imperialism. Many millennia before the European age of exploration, for instance, the ancient Egyptians recorded in tomb paintings and hieroglyphs the physical differences between themselves and the lighter-skinned Syrians and the darker-skinned Nubians they conquered. The ancient Greek physician Hippocrates, known as the father of Western medicine, separated the Scythians, Asians, and Greeks into different body types explained by the topography and climate of the regions they lived in.[5] The Bible offers the story of Noah's sons, Ham, Shem, and Japheth, as an explanation for the geographical origins of different groups of people, one that would later be interpreted by white Americans as evidence of a divine justification for slavery.

Believing in the uniqueness and superiority of one's own group may be universal, but it is not equivalent to race.[6] These ancient attempts to describe and explain differences among peoples did not partition all human beings into a relatively small number of innately separable types. Nor did they treat these differences as markers of immutable distinctions that determine each

Dear Nonprofits,

You cannot make the world better through exploitation. Pay your workers. Stop shaming your workers over their desire to earn a livable income by threatening them with the weight of the very inequity they are literally working to resolve.

Be the kind of friend that empowers others to forget your flaws and mistakes by being better. Be the kind of friend who helps someone they don't particularly like become better. That's not controversial still, right?

When friends don't learn and especially when they react with anger, it is so dramatically painful. Cutting someone loose forces you to remember what you had previously chosen to forget, and you deal with all of those feelings PLUS regret about the time you invested.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 29 Mar 2018
We allow ourselves to forget what our friends do/say because, in that moment, we feel the situation will be made just by having more time to deepen the relationship, see them learn, and become what you actually need them to become free from those memories.

I'm feeling that forgiveness is not part of justice. Allowing yourself to forget what someone has done is far more liberating (to me) than having to forgive something that just plain happened. We do this all the time with our problematic faves. 1/x

Why are the Kochs doing this? Well, because capitalism perpetually dooms itself. We have incarcerated so many of our low-wage workers that we need to spring them back out so they can continue to be exploited. Don't let this fly under your radar.

This cannot be ignored.

This is why Twitter is an awful medium for this. You're welcome to pick it back up on my fb, but there are at least 3 diff argument
1) domestic abusers should not own guns (Bc it makes murder 5x more likely)
2) 5 day waiting period
3) What Mason said (text arg goes here)

No, I'm saying don't reference a text without providing evidence that text backs up what you say. I think you misunderstood what I was getting at with the 5 day comment. What militia-led movement needs guns that quickly and has not already been acquiring weapons?

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 25 Feb 2018

Replying to @Tulli_ToolBox

I just can't fathom thinking that restriction (given the massively disproportionate impact of gun violence on women) or a five day waiting period (which, like I said, doesn't restrict militia formation) is somehow going to destroy community self defense.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 25 Feb 2018

Replying to @Tulli_ToolBox

No, not particularly. They still do. The reason that matters is about firing speed imo. But again, evidence-based proposals should guide our law, not haggling over what long-dead people wanted. Do you think domestic abusers should own guns, or do you need some data?

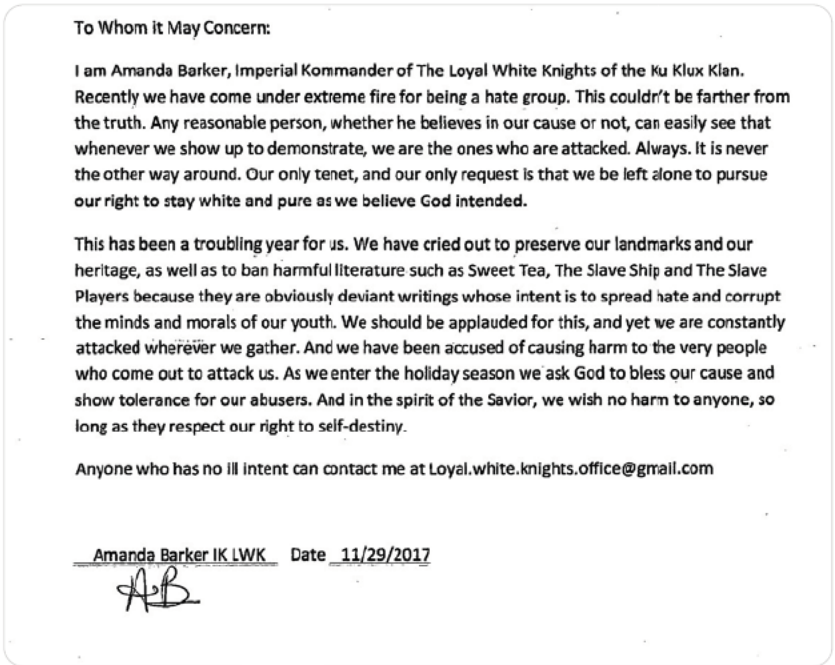
Y'all the KKK are the real victims here. They were just trying to purify the nation or something that "reasonable people" think is normal.



To Whom it May Concern:

I am Amanda Barker, Imperial Kommander of The Loyal White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. Recently we have come under extreme fire for being a hate group. This couldn't be farther from the truth. Any reasonable person, whether he believes in our cause or not, can easily see that whenever we show up to demonstrate, we are the ones who are attacked. Always. It is never the other way around. Our only tenet, and our only request is that we be left alone to pursue our right to stay white and pure as we believe God intended.

This has been a troubling year for us. We have cried out to preserve our landmarks and our heritage, as well as to ban harmful literature such as Sweet Tea, The Slave Ship and The Slave Players because they are obviously deviant writings whose intent is to spread hate and corrupt the minds and morals of our youth. We should be applauded for this, and yet we are constantly attacked wherever we gather. And we have been accused of causing harm to the very people who come out to attack us. As we enter the holiday season we ask God to bless our cause and show tolerance for our abusers. And in the spirit of the Savior, we wish no harm to anyone, so long as they respect our right to self-destiny.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Four weeks after his deadline, Defendant Fields filed an untimely opposition to the Doe Plaintiffs Motion to Proceed by Pseudonym. In his opposition, Fields identifies no reason for his month's long delay. Rather, he asks the Court to accept without explanation a filing he knew—or clearly should have known—was due a month earlier. The Pretrial Order entered in this case, and fundamental rules of fairness, require that the Court strike Fields' opposition.

You seem to be thinking of this in a very narrow way. We don't just measure antibodies and say "Yep, checks out!" This is measured over time, with time-series analysis of mass amounts of data over decades to see when immunity begins to decline.

Depends on how you define oppression, but I think that's an absolutely fair point. The question remains-- if the goal is to uphold what is good for the people as a whole, why is that a bad thing, if the strongest comes to mean those with the most power to cause suffering?

Ah- I get that in theory, but it still asks for a level of data that the public doesn't have access too. I'd be interested in taking it up as a project if clerks would be willing to interview and if I had a partner in DC to tag-team setting up interviews with. :)

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 11 Dec 2017

Thank you, that would explain it! 🤓🤓

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 11 Dec 2017

Perhaps, but that data would be nearly impossible to collect. It would rely on self-reporting and be extremely expensive to analyze in any meaningful or academically rigorous way.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 11 Dec 2017

Replying to @ARKloster @adamliptak @Tonymauro

Ah- so, I don't think it's useful to think in terms of individuals. All of the law clerks there, or at least the majority, worked hard and are likely excellent at their job. It's more useful to say "what caused the demographic disparity?" and remedy for the future.

Chefs and restaurateurs- pay your workers enough so they can leave if they need to. Let people take time off to build relationships. Scolding men only gets us so far, and firing working-class men, usually men of color, gets us even less. Be active, not reactive, in this moment.

People like Mario Batali, who have the wealth and the means to not have to work in those conditions deserve so little sympathy. When you move beyond the 17 hour days of standing on uneven floors in a 125 F kitchen..... you have an obligation to use that to change the industry.

The line between sexual harassment and the desperation for intimacy that happens between workers in confined spaces, who are low on sleep, who haven't eaten well in years (chefs eat worse than anyone), whose hours preclude meaningful social interaction... it blurs. It's messy.

What's going on with Mario Batali is not surprising. Women in kitchens end up sleeping with chefs all the time, just to keep our jobs, though it's never said. There's a working-class sentiment that we can't tackle the problem and continue to make ends meet... which isn't wrong.

Trump transition team was intensely focused on improving relations with Moscow and was willing to intervene to pursue that goal despite a request from the Obama administration that it not sow confusion about official American policy before Mr. Trump took office.

On Dec. 29, a transition adviser to Mr. Trump, K. T. McFarland, wrote in an email to a colleague that sanctions announced hours before by the Obama administration in retaliation for Russian election meddling were aimed at discrediting Mr. Trump's victory. The sanctions could also make it much harder for Mr. Trump to ease tensions with Russia, "which has just thrown the U.S.A. election to him," she wrote in the emails obtained by The Times.

It is not clear whether Ms. McFarland was saying she believed that the election had in fact been thrown. A White House lawyer said on Friday that she meant only that the Democrats were portraying it that way.

Dane County had a true moment of solidarity tonight. We fought for Black lives, individual liberties, & working people of all races. We fought for those w/ disabilities and for kids who make dumb mistakes. We fought for each other, and would leave none behind. Forward, Wisconsin.

These liberal elites are so out of touch, it's absurd. I'd 100% rather people have the right to conceal carry without a license than "maintain our current police strength."

> Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett issued the below statement:

> "I strongly disagree that Wisconsin needs to completely walk away from the 2011 concealed carry law that required individuals to get a permit before being allowed to carry a concealed weapon.
> I recognize public safety is of paramount concern for us all. That's why I'm asking the legislature for a dedicated revenue stream to fund and maintain our police strength level.

> At the same time, citizens and the legislature are expecting more and more of our police department.

The state legislature ended benefits for the domestic partners of Wisconsin employees, offering us COBRA to fill in the gap. Given what @UWMadison pays me, we'd have $235/month left after paying for our health insurance. And that's before Trump starts taxing my tuition waiver.

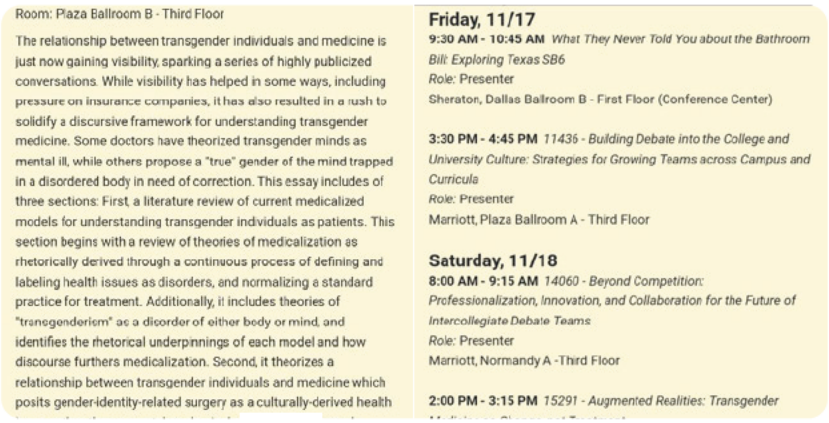
Come visit me, #NCA2017! This talk on Saturday is by far the most personally exciting thing I've done as a scholar.



Room: Plaza Ballroom B - Third Floor

The relationship between transgender individuals and medicine is just now gaining visibility, sparking a series of highly publicized conversations. While visibility has helped in some ways, including pressure on insurance companies, it has also resulted in a rush to solidify a discursive framework for understanding transgender medicine. Some doctors have theorized transgender minds as mental ill, while others propose a "true" gender of the mind trapped in a disordered body in need of correction. This essay includes of three sections: First, a literature review of current medicalized models for understanding transgender individuals as patients. This section begins with a review of theories of medicalization as rhetorically derived through a continuous process of defining and labeling health issues as disorders, and normalizing a standard practice for treatment. Additionally, it includes theories of "transgenderism" as a disorder of either body or mind, and identifies the rhetorical underpinnings of each model and how discourse furthers medicalization. Second, it theorizes a relationship between transgender individuals and medicine which posits gender-identity-related surgery as a culturally-derived health

It's a university, not a relativist free for all. We don't have people who believe irrational positions informed by emotion, not facts.

Ming the Merciless did nothing wrong @notcolloquial · 6 Oct 2017

When all you have are talking points, that's not academic. Rent out a non-academic space. You lack rigor. You're not special. That's all.

T: That's a good way to look at things. So, it seems the main point the left has against you is when you spoke of a "peaceful ethnic cleansing". What did you mean by this?

R: The speech in which those words occurred is online. (Few take the time to put my words into context.). I was referring to the "peaceful ethnic cleansing" that occurred after the Paris Peace Conference of 1919, in which the map of Europe was literally redrawn after the First World War. The guiding principle (at least ostensibly) was "self-determination" and ethnic nationalism). That said, I obviously think that "re-immigration" and population transfers are possible. And that they can be done quite peacefully. All that is required is will. If we allow populations to follow the movement of capital or the transformations of communications, then there will be no coherent nations remaining.

We don't oppose @RichardBSpencer speaking on campus because he's a white supremacist- though he is. It's because his ideas are legit stupid.

T: Say it all happens. White America wakes up, and you're at the table ready to create the ethnostate. Which parts of America would it be in? Or even the whole country?

R: First off, before the Ethno-state we should advocate for pro-White policies, which are just on the edge of the Overton window or which actually can be enacted. I've been very clear that the Ethno-State is an ideal, that it may not appear in my lifetime, and that I cannot predict the contingencies of history. In other words, I know the Why and the What For. I can't tell you the How. The Left and Zionists
